

MORNING APPEAL.

Friday.....August 5, 1887.

THEMSELVES TO BLAME.

The Gentiles of Salt Lake City have but themselves to blame for not having elected their Gentile delegates to the Territorial Legislature. They woke up the other morning to find they needed less than 40 votes to have won the fight. They also discovered that had every Gentile who registered voted they would have carried their ticket in Salt Lake. How these luke warm, stay-at-home nonentities must have felt when they realized that their laziness and lack of interest lost them this important fight!

Such a victory would have stamped the polygamist gang in Utah. It would have spread a paralysis through the already wasting body of Mormonism. The Gentiles should carefully go over the poll list, find who the drones are, and publish their names in the Tribune. Doubtless a good many of them are men who have made a good living off their fellow Gentiles for years, and want to do still better, only they like to lay back in the shade and have somebody else do the fighting. The result, however, is really a great victory, for it shows that the young apostate Mormons, tired of being robbed and lied to by the church, have turned out and struck a blow for freedom at the polls.

Speaking of the defeat of Lawrence and Varian the Tribune says: "The sorrow is intensified by the thought that if the Gentiles had registered there were plenty in the precinct to have elected him, but a few did not go to the polls, and some evidently were out of the city. One satisfaction is that every Liberal vote polled was cast for Mr. Varian. Mr. Marshall led him by three votes, but these were Mormon votes. Mr. Varian's defeat is the one cloud upon the sun of the victory. But even as it is, it is magnificent. The spell is broken. There will be such a working force in the Legislature as will put the Church on record at last. But this is not the best feature of all. It will give the Gentiles a confidence which will cause them to see to it hereafter that they are registered. It will have the effect to divide the control of city affairs with the Saints next winter; it will make it understood hereafter that there is a fighting chance for victory, and that is a new sensation for Utah, and it will make men, heretofore indifferent, active workers. Who says the dawn has not come?"

A Brave Act.

We learn by a dispatch from Grafton, this Territory, that a young society lady of that place, named Miss Olive Sanborn, is the heroine of a daring act. It seems she was standing in front of the postoffice when suddenly a runaway team hitched to a buggy came dashing down the avenue at a terrific rate. The moment Miss Sanborn saw them she leaped to the middle of the street at a single bound and, to quote from the dispatch, "seized her maddened team by the bits." Planting her feet on the ground, with her toes turned slightly out, she, in the words of the dispatch, "threw the team high in the air." As they came down she again seized them by the bridles, one in each hand, and swinging the heavy and half-crazed beasts around at each side of her, like the arms of a windmill, she brought them down on the ground at each revolution one striking on its side while the other was above her head in the air with a hollow thud like the sound of two pile-drivers at work together and striking alternately. Some five or ten minutes of this kind of treatment served to bring the frightened and infuriated animals to a halt and calmed them so much that they both lay flat on their backs gasping for breath. Miss Sanborn then stepped back to the postoffice and inquired for her mail in a calm tone of voice and a captivating smile. Pieces of the wagon, which broke loose when the young lady jerked the horses into the air the first time, continued to fall for three-quarters of an hour. —Dakota Bell.

Edward L. Spring.
Edward L. Spring has resigned his position on the Post to accept a place on the Stock Report.
Mr. Spring has been identified with the Post for about ten years, and its readers will miss his breezy stock articles. The Report has gained an excellent man, and a well posted man on stock dealing, by this change.
